

5 reasons I oppose requiring support for internet wire tapping:

1. It will impose a significant burden on consumers and small ISPs.
2. The burden will benefit large corporations by wedding out smaller competitors, leading to a homogenized internet.
3. Law enforcement has not shown that it can actually manage evidence and other private data in a responsible way.
4. Even without this mandate on ISPs, there are many reasonable ways for law enforcement to capture a user's internet traffic such as network loggers, keystroke loggers, etc...
5. The proposed rules would make wire tapping so easy that it would be more likely to be abused by law enforcement.
